USE NO SALT IN FOOD.

Races Who Appear to Get Along Very Well Without the Common Condiment.

It is generally believed that common salt is as indispensable to the healthy nutrition of the human body as water itself. And that this is the common rule is quite true, but there are several | p races who appear to get along very well indeed without using a particle of this condiment in their food. For instance, the Damaras, in southwestern Africa, never ing there has arisen such a bitter take salt by any chance, but this is dispute among the aspirants for perhaps because their well water is brackish. One tribe of New Zealanders is said to hold salt in abhorrence. In several parts of northern Asia, also, a common lisregard of salt prevails.
